

Contributors

STEPHEN ANDORS is editor of the Bulletin of Concerned Asian Scholars and an assistant professor of political science at the State University of New York at Oswego.

PHIL BILLINGSLEY has recently completed a Ph.D. thesis at the University of Leeds on banditry in Republican China.

DAVID BONAVIA is the Peking correspondent of The Times (London). He is the author of Fat Sasha and the Urban Guerilla: Protest and Conformism in the Soviet Union, and of a chapter on modern China in, China's Three Thousand Years.

PIERRE-HENRI CASSOU is an Administrateur Civil in the Direction du Trésor at the Ministère de l'Economie et des Finances in Paris, where he is in charge of industrial loans.

WILLIAM DOLBY is a lecturer in the Department of Chinese at the University of Edinburgh.

LLOYD E. EASTMAN professor of history at the University of Illinois, is currently working on China under Nationalist rule, 1937-39.

MARK ELVIN fellow of St Antony's College, University of Oxford, and lecturer in Chinese history, is author of The Pattern of the Chinese Past.

VICTOR C. FALKENHEIM is assistant professor of political science at the University of Toronto and is working on local politics in 20th century China.

ROBERT MICHAEL FIELD, an economist with the Central Intelligence Agency in Washington D.C., is currently detailed to the faculty of the National War College as director of economic studies.

WOLFGANG FRANKE is professor of Chinese studies at Hamburg University, and particularly interested in Ming and Ch'ing history and in the history of the Chinese and South-east Asia.

MERLE GOLDMAN, author of Literary Dissent in Communist China, is a professor of history at Boston University and an associate of the Harvard East Asian Research Center.

VICTOR E. W. HAYWARD is research secretary of the China Study Project at Selby Oak Colleges, the editor of World Studies of Churches in Mission and the author of Ears to Hear.

CHI-HSI HU, attaché de recherche at the Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique in Paris, is the author of Pékin et le mouvement communiste indien. He is now working on a full-scale study of the Kiangsi Soviet.

MENNO T. KAMMINGA received a law degree from Groningen State University and spent 1973-74 at the Fletcher School of International Law and Diplomacy at Tufts University. He specializes in international environmental problems.

W. KLATT was formerly economic adviser at the British Foreign Office and is now at St Antony's College, University of Oxford, working on agrarian questions in Asia.

VICTOR H. LI, associate professor of law at Stanford University, is working on methods of social control in China and on legal aspects of China's foreign trade.

PERRY LINK is lecturer in East Asian studies at Princeton University and is completing a Ph.D. thesis for Harvard University on popular urban literature in China, 1910-30.

PIET VAN DER LOON is professor of Chinese at Oxford University and specializes in Chinese bibliography, philology, theatre and ritual.

DONALD J. MUNRO, professor of philosophy and associate of the center for Chinese Studies at the University of Michigan, is author of The Concept of Man in Early China and, The Concept of Man in Contemporary China (forthcoming).

PETER NOLAN is a fellow of the Contemporary China Institute at the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London. He is working on rural income in China in the 1950s.

PAUL G. PICKOWICZ is assistant professor of history at the University of California, San Diego and, in 1973, completed a Ph.D. dissertation on "Ch'ü Ch'iu-pai and the Origins of Marxist Literary Criticism in China."

JAMES E. SHERIDAN, the author of Chinese Warlordism: The Career of Feng Yu-hsiang, is professor of history at Northwestern University.

JAMES L. WATSON is lecturer in Asian anthropology at the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London, and author of a forthcoming book, Emigration and the Chinese Lineage.

KATHERINE WATSON is working on a thesis on the history of Romanesque architecture jointly at the School of Oriental and African Studies and at the Courtauld Institute, University of London, and has an additional interest in Chinese and Thai cookery.

JOHN BARNETT WELFIELD is a fellow in the department of international relations, at the Research School of Pacific Studies, Australian National University, and is working on Sino-Japanese relations in the postwar period.

D. GORDON WHITE, a lecturer in the political science department at the Australian National University, is completing a Ph.D. dissertation for Stanford University on the politics of social stratification in contemporary China.